

Global Crossing Selected by MP3.com for Web Site Hosting

Premier Online Music Destination Maximizes Site Performance With Leading Outsourced Hosting Architecture

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: OCTOBER 12, 1999

Sunnyvale, CA - Global Crossing's (NASDAQ: GBLX) complex Web hosting division, formerly Frontier GlobalCenter, today announced that MP3.com, the Internet's premier online digital music destination, will be utilizing Global Crossing's world-class complex web hosting architecture to host its site www.mp3.com.

"It is very exciting for Global Crossing to work with MP3.com - a pioneer in the distribution of music online," said Matt Parnell, vice president of product management for Global Crossing's complex Web hosting division. "We specialize in providing the highest quality of service for companies whose businesses depend upon their Internet presence. Global Crossing realizes that MP3.com operates a Web destination where downtime is unacceptable."

The complex hosting architecture is comprised of three centers of excellence:

- The Global Crossing Network - 88,100 global route mile, fiber-optic, redundant ring architecture designed to deliver unrivaled speed, scalability and reliability. The Global Crossing Network currently connects over 170 international metropolitan areas.
- Facilities - geographically distributed, 24x7x365, on-net data centers, known as "Global Centers," designed to high-security, disaster-resistant specifications to ensure guaranteed uptime.
- Application Networking Services - highly available, reliable and flexible utility applications and services that enable anytime, anywhere computing.

Global Crossing hosts more than 300 top Internet brands - some of the best known names in the business, including Yahoo!, ZDNet, Red Hat and eToys. Global Crossing facilitates 60 percent of all Internet searches and delivers more than 8.8 billion page views per month, nearly 2 million hits per minute.
